

“For some reason they became isolated in the east and the west now they’re coming back to occupy that central space.”

“The interesting question is why weren’t they there before? Why are they suddenly in that part of the world? Maybe it’s something to do with climate? It’s something we can’t readily answer.”

“There are some interesting questions there that we haven’t addressed yet. For example, do these eastern and western penguins recognise each other in some way?” Dr BurrIDGE said.

“Do they preferentially mate with their own type or another type? We don’t have any evidence for that segregation or choice, but need to investigate further.”

---

by:

Phone: (03) 6226 2691 or 0417 537 375

Email: