

Tuesday 29 October 2019

---

Half of the marine life in the world's oceans depends on the enrichment of phytoplankton by dissolved iron, just as plants at the base of the food chain on land need nutrients to help them grow.

However, knowledge of the processes by which iron, used by the phytoplankton, is resupplied to the marine environment and distributed in the deep ocean is limited due to sparse data.

A new IMAS-

